Your newest launches are winning. Amazon is where the stars leak.

1,944 customer reviews and four retail shelves for six SharkNinja launches, analyzed from public data.
A work sample for the Applied AI & Analytics Co-op by Bill Enright.

THE FINDINGS

01 The channel rating gap is real

The same machines average 4.70 stars at Best Buy but 4.3 on Amazon and 4.2 to 4.5 at Walmart. Amazon is the first shelf most shoppers see, and it is the weakest.

02 Reliability drives the negatives, not recipes

41 percent of negative Creami-family reviews cite a unit that broke or a painful return. Only 8 percent complain about texture. The fix lives in quality and service experience, not the product formula.

03 Safety language sits unread

One verbatim 1-star review reports a machine that “started smoking and melted through plastic into ice cream.” No system routes that sentence to the quality team today.

04 Pricing discipline is uneven

Scoop & Swirl holds a $0.99 spread across every channel. The base CREAMi spans $80.99 and SLUSHi $100.99, while 3.8-star refurb listings outrank hero SKUs in Walmart search.

05 The portfolio read

SLUSHi XL (4.86) and BlendBOSS (4.89) are the strongest launches in the set. AutoBarista (4.54, 11 percent negative) is the watch item.

BY THE NUMBERS

0.40
star rating gap on identical products, Best Buy vs Amazon

41%
of Creami negatives are reliability or returns, not taste

$100.99
price spread on SLUSHi across retailers. Scoop & Swirl holds $0.99

1,944
reviews read end to end by one agentic pipeline, in one afternoon

6 LAUNCHES · 4 RETAILERS · 100% PUBLIC DATA

WHAT I WOULD BUILD AT SHARKNINJA

This pipeline on a weekly loop: Amazon review-response queues, safety-language triage straight to the quality team, and automated price-integrity alerts across every retail shelf.

Live dashboard with every chart and source: m5rvkhmhrj-sudo.github.io/launch-watch

Bill Enright · enright.wi@northeastern.edu · (331) 332-0036 · linkedin.com/in/bill-enright5

Independent work sample. Not affiliated with, commissioned by, or endorsed by SharkNinja. All data from public retail pages, October 27, 2026. Quotes are verbatim customer reviews from BestBuy.com. Layout modeled on the McKinsey “In Brief” executive summary format, cited among top templates by ClickUp.